HOW SHARPS AND SPONGES EXIST.

The Way They Fleece Young Bloods and Wealthy Old Men, Who Should Know Better, Out of Their Money-Barnactes and Suckers.

[Pittsburgh Dispatch.] He was of medium height and inclined to stoutness. He stood last evening in the door of a leading hotel in a graceful attitude. A neatly-fitting suit of clothes of neutral colors, faultless linen, well-poltshed shoes, a hat of the latest style and a modest display of jewelry gave him an appearance that persuaded on-lookers he must be a sensible, well-to-do fellow, and when he pushed his hat back with a hand in which the blue veins were perceptible through the transparent skin, and said to a man who was approaching: "Well, old boy, a sight of you is good for sore eyes; when did you get back?" and a dozen other questions in quick succession, his eyes sparkling with pleasure as he grasped the new-comer's band, you

They locked arms, slowly watked to the bar and leisurely sipped the sherry ordered by the new arrival, laughing and small-talk. They afterward entered and sat down in the reading-room near a Dispatch reporter, who was conversing with an old detective now engaged in other pursuits, and related to each other various humorous and spicy anecdotes of their summer trips to the pleasure resorts. Their good humor and jovial manner was catchhum of voices, and fifty eyes were attracted toward toward them. Old men dropped their papers and glanced at them of his intimates he confided the fact that over their spectacles. Finally the second his father had gone away on a business arrival arose and, noting the time, said: 'Say, let's go up there and have a time.

Celebrate our return, you know." "Can't do it, old fellow," answered the other with a look of annoyance. "My con-founded trip has run me short."

"Pshaw! Don't mention it. Come right along or shall I carry you?" and he gayly

He is what you may call a genteel sponge. He does nothing, has no visible means of support, but is always just as you saw him a few minutes o-neat, careless and good-humored. When alone he is unobtrusive, courteous and polite. You will never see him in the company of common-looking people or loafing in saloons. Affects a popular sort of piety, and, excepting in the summertime, frequents the Young Men's Christian Association rooms, and reads all the news yer breast yer went give me away?" from a religious article down to the spiciest news in the daily papers. He never plays second-fiddle excepting in the matter of Jimmy's face as he sail: cash. Knows all that's going on, and can "Got sixty cents left;" a discuss science and philosophy as readily as any problem in sports. Scarcely ever bets or plays cards for money. It's rather expensive, you know, and has a tendency to With his most intimate friends he makes no pretenses. They know all about him, but they like him. He's entertaining, al ways proper and can be depended on. His friends are never afraid of him com promising them. He can calculate with the utmost nicety when he should retire. Ho's as sensitive as a shadow in this respect. Rich young bloods like to have bim around, he is so accommodating and clever. He bows his neck to only a few, and they support him and use him. There is nothing of the cearse 'lend me so much until Saturday ' about him. His friends make a lucky speculation and make him a present of a few shares. When they know he has some money they give him a pointer and he dabbles in stocks. At such times he spends his money freely, but never assumes anything. He is useful in

In fact, they don't need much money, for they eat, sleep and live with their victio. Warn they run short, however, they sell or pawn such jewelry as they can spare without notice. There is no doub but that they frequently, when he is douck, absolutely sub bim. They they gamile, but on the races or whatever may be got good. Whenever they see that ir is to is sinking they dovise a grand and and then desert and bunt up another dupe who wants to see the world with his own eve. This class of sponges usually, soon drop on of the field, as their life is a fast on .. They wind up in the Workhouse or Penitentiary, after they have been compelled, in a manner, to resort to more unscrupulous means to get a living. Some of them are shrewd enough to husband their money and get into some sporting business, or start a saloon, or run a gambling-house. Others go to different cities and carry on all sorts of confidence games. I know one who, a number of years ago, after having run through a young blood, began living a more refined life, fell in love with a girl who had great strength of character, and by her influence he is now in business, and would never be taken for an old sponger."

WHY JIMMY WAS SO SAD. How He Learned the Price of Feathers.

[Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.] There is much that is pathetic in the history of a child. There are hidden incidents in the life of children-especially male children, which, if known, would create a profound impression in the immediate circle of the hero of the same. A reporter caught a glimose of this pathos yesterday. A good little boy who is the delight of his parents sat on the steps of his house out at Oakland, after the circus parade excitement had died out. He was sad and downcast. When other little There was a momentary hush in the of voices, and fifty eyes were merely shook his head in a weak, sad, negative way which spoke volumes. To one trip and his mother was sick in bed. There was no money to be spared for circus tickets, and Jimmy being without resources must stay at home.

In the afternoon he disappeared. His misery was too much for him, and he was supposed to have dragged his sorrowful little body off to some secluded nook where made an attempt as if do so, and after all he could mourn unseen. In the evening protests had been silenced they went out, when the song birds sang from the tall "Who are they?" inquired the reporter tree tops and the hush of twilight was in the air, Jimmy reappeared on the front "The young man who came up is the son steps. Nearly a Collision. I left London for Bordeaux as passenger on board the steamer Lapwing (owned by on Thursday, June 12. All went well up till Friday night, when in due course my-self and the other passengers (among whom were several ladies) reited for the night. Shortly after midnight I was awakened by the vessel stopping and the noise of the steam whistly. Being a con stant traveler by steamers, I concluded we were in a fog, the most dangerous enemy the saflor has to contend with. I, there fore, got out of my berth, diessed myself and went on deck. There I found a dense fog surrounded us. Not feeling inclined t sleep I proceeded to the smoking room where I sat smoking a cigat. About I a. in. I heard the sound of a grange whistle close at hand.
